Many of the oldest and ablest of Board from ur publicists contend that this should have Board and Rooms furnished from $3 00 to $4 & have been done at first, and that the offence of Davis comes clearly within the authority of the National Constitution. It would be a little surrous if the objection sic, are sujoyed in the place. of the Chief Justice should constrain the overnment to act upon these views. In innection with this matter a very important opinion has lately been advanced by J. P. Bishop, the author of the celebrated work: "Commentaries on Criminal Law." In the third edition of his work just published he has the following important note, which is of great immediate value:

"I. The expediency of handing over a rebel, especially a leading rebel, to be tried by the civil tribunals, after a great fect war, has been subdued, is quite another matter. If we assume it to be the law of nations, which it certainly is not, that such a rebel cannot be executed as a raitor, then it would not be wise to vio late this law, though the violation should involve no breach of the Constitution. Probably, also, no officer of our governent would be even constitutionally jus-fied in violating the law of nations hough the question in this case would not be for the judiciary, but for the Prestence, but that this shall be pronounced by a military tribunal. Let us remember that the law of maliens does not prescribe the court in which the trial shall be had. We are, in this matter, to look to our inwe are, in ternal system of laws.

"3. Let us illustrate the matter by a case now before us. Mr. Jefferson Davis, the Jeader of our secession rebellion, is, at the time of this writing, a prisoner in the hands of our military nowers, having been captured by the army in a time of war. Once it was a rule, the writers on the law still further modified, and even slavery still further modified, and even slavery could not be imposed on the captive. Thus it stands now, as a general rule. But the rule has this exception, that it does not apply, to its full extent, to the case of rebels subdued and captured by their offended sovereign. Our Constitution clothes the National Government with full war powers, as known under the law of nations (see vol. I, sees. 49-88); therefore our full-tray authorities. LATEST NEWS BY TELECRAPH.
